where to get legal images?

I use Google Image Search anytime I need pictures for a talk, website, presentation, or idea scrapbook. It's not obvious, but you can filter the search results for those images that let you legally reuse them. Click the Tools button (to the right of Settings) beneath the Google search box, select "Usage Rights" and then choose your filter. (You can also filter by color, size, type, etc. in addition to license directly from Advance Image Search page.) The results will be a pile of select images that have Creative Commons or other fair use status.

To output a CSV file instead of webpage, change output=tables to output=csv in the above example. Then import the CSV file into spreadsheet software and sort and manipulate results as desired.

Honorable Mention items:

Archive.org video player - "HD" and "CC" buttons!

Click on them until they turn white.

Their state is "sticky".

HD - stream HD (720p or 1080p) version of the videos vs. the 640x480 "web video" derivative.

CC - turn on closed captions!

Need to let your users know about these. They're a user controlled item in the user's browser.

Closed Captions are being generated for all videos in the Community Media Archive!

- in progress, limited to 4,000 videos per day.

search for 'collection:yourcollection AND format:subrip'

"Play All" link on Archive.org upper right hand corner of archive.org pages

it's rough, but it can play the results of a search can't save it, can't share it (yet)...

but you can use it with the searches under Classical Arts Showcase replacement programming to interactively check out programs produced by other stations in the Community Media Archive and determine programs and series you might like to run on your channel.
